PREFACE.

The bulk of the coins contained in the present Collection, formed part of a mass of miscellaneous coins belonging to the Dehli Museum, which was housed in the Town Hall. The nucleus may have been collected by the old Dehli Archæological Society, but as a whole, they appear to have been got together in a haphazard fashion, no reliable list was in existence, and no attempt had been made to arrange them in any way. Last year it was suggested that the coins of the Dehli kings should be picked out, and formed into a collection illustrating the history of the successive rulers who have reigned in the ancient capital, to be placed on view at the new Museum in the Dehli Fort. During the course of the work it was found necessary to supplement the original Town Hall collection, and this was effected by means of a grant made by the Archæological Department.

The Collection, as it now stands, comprises four hundred and six exhibits. It is in no way representative of all the various types of the multitudinous issues of the different kings, but on the other hand, all the important rulers are represented by well-known types of their coins, and it is not wanting in rare specimens. The Collection is intended to be on view, and to be of such a bulk that it can be inspected with interest and pleasure by visitors to the Fort Museum. As far as is consistent with the attainment of these ends, I think it may be claimed that the Collection is sufficiently large and representative.

The Catalogue is in three parts. The first part deals with the coins of the Pre-Muhammadan Dynasties; the second with those of the Pathán Kings of Dehli; and the third with the coins of the Mughal Emperors. As an introduction to each part, a brief Note has been written describing the coins and their inscriptions. Lists of the kings of the various dynasties have been appended, but little or no attempt has been made to narrate their history, which is readily accessible in the many existing works on the subject. I have endeavoured to make the Notes a very brief introduction to the fascinating subject of Indian numismatics.

A certain amount of information has also been incorporated in the Catalogue proper. Translations of interesting inscriptions, as on some of the coins of Muhammad bin Tughlaq, have been given. The Persian couplets on the coins of the Mughal Emperors have been explained.

'Coin Collecting in Northern India,' by C. J. Rodgers (Pioneer Press, Allahabad), is a good book for the beginner. Mr. Thomas's 'The Chronicles of the Pathán Kings of Dehli' is still the standard work on the numismatic history of the Pathán dynasties of Dehli. A large amount of valuable information is contained in 'Musalman Numismatics' by Dr. Codrington.

The form of the first part of the Catalogue has been based on Volume I of the Catalogue of the Coins in the Indian Museum, Calcutta, by Mr. Vincent Smith; that of the second part on Volume II of the same Catalogue, by Mr. Nelson Wright; and that of the third part on C. J. Rodgers' Catalogue of the Coins of the Mughal Emperors in the Lahore Museum.

I wish to acknowledge my indebtedness to the above works, which are the sources of my material.

DYNASTIES.

INTRODUCTION.

The city of Dehli is believed to have been originally colonised from Kanauj in the sixth century of our era. From about the middle of the tenth century to the Muḥammadan conquest in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, it remained under the sway of various Rajput dynasties. The earliest of these was that established by the Tomara Rájás of Ajmír and Dehli, founded, according to tradition, in the eighth century, but not authentically known until the tenth. The Collection contains specimens of the currency of two chiefs of this line, Sallakshanapála-Deva, and Kumárapála-Deva.

The other Rajput dynasty known to have been definitely connected with Dehli, was that of the Chauháns of Ajmír, Dehli and Sákambharí. It came to an end with the celebrated Prithvi Rája, known locally as Rai Pithora, who was defeated and executed by Muḥammad bin Sâm in A.D. 1193. Coins of Prithvi Rája are included in the Collection.

INTRODUCTION.

The Pathán Kings of Dehli, so-called, as the foregoing list shows, comprise six distinct dynasties. The history of each dynasty exhibits similar features. It owed its rise to the strength and energy of a founder able to exact obedience from a turbulent nobility. His successors did little to maintain their position, and in many cases sank into depravity and vice. In time came rebellions, and a revolution, the leader of which became the first of a new line.

The first ruler of the Ghazni dynasty to make a permanent home in India was Muizzu-d-dín Muḥammad bin Sám. In a great battle he crushed a confederacy of Hindu rájas led by Prithví Rája of Ajmír, and afterwards extended his conquests over the whole of Northern India. One of his generals was Táj ud-Dín Yalduz. Coins of the latter, and of Maḥmúd bin Muḥammad bin Sám are included in this Collection. The Quṭb Minár at Dehli was probably commenced by Muḥammad bin Sám, and carried on by Quṭbu-d-dín Aibak. The upper storeys were added by Fíroz Tughlaq.

Aibak had been a slave of Muḥammad bin Sám. Aibak's slave, Shamsu-d-dín Altamsh, put aside Arám Sháh, and seated himself on his master's throne, where he reigned for a quarter of a century. Hence this dynasty is often known as the Slave Dynasty.

The influence of Altamsh is clearly shown by the acceptance of his daughter Raḡiya as Empress, the only Muḥammadan queen in her own right who ever occupied the throne of Dehli.

Ghiyáṣu-d-dín Balban, a stern and efficient ruler, did all that was possible by the most rigorous measures to consolidate his position, and to secure an undisputed succession. But all was nullified by the weakness and debaucheries of his successor Kaiqubád, and the throne was usurped by Jalálu-ddín Khalji. The latter in his turn was assassinated by his nephew 'Aláu-d-dín Muḥammad, who had little difficulty in putting an end to the reign of the boy Sultán, Ruknu-d-dín Ibráhím, son of Jalálu-d-dín. He showed himself a strong and unscrupulous ruler, and managed to reign for twenty years. His coins are very common.

His son Quṭbu-d-dín Mubárák was one of the most debauched monarchs who ever sat on a throne. The coins of this Sultán are of fine workmanship. Square pieces in silver, billon, and copper are met with; examples of all these are contained in this Collection. Quṭbu-d-dín was murdered by his successor in 1320 A.D., but the latter was quickly defeated by the governor of Multán, who ascended the throne as Ghiyásu-d-dín Tughlaq Sháh. This Sultán was assassinated by his own son in 1324 A.D., and the parricide succeeded under the name of Muḥammad bin Tughlaq. The annals of his reign are rich from a numismatic point of view. Coins of many types, exhibiting a profusion of inscriptions, were issued in great numbers. This Sultán succeeded to more of India than any of his predecessors, and it was during his reign that disintegration set in.

The long and uneventful reign of Fíroz Sháh was distinguished by the number and magnificence of the public works carried out under his auspices. His coins in several varieties are very common. During his lifetime he took the unusual course of associating at various times his three sons Fath Khan, Zafar, and Muḥammad in the government. Coins bearing the joint names of Fíroz and of these three sons respectively, are extant.

Tughlaq II was the son of Fath Khan, and Abú Bakr the son of Zafar.

Mahmúd was perhaps the most inept of Fíroz Sháh's successors. The possession of the very capital itself was disputed by another grandson of Fíroz, Nuṣrat Sháh, and for some time both Sultáns issued coins from Dehli. This internecine strife was terminated by the advance of the celebrated Taimúr, who totally defeated the Indian army under the walls of the capital in the year A.D. 1398. The merciless sack of Dehli and massacre of its inhabitants followed. After the departure of Taimúr, the capital remained in a state of complete anarchy till with the death of Maḥmūd in A.D. 1412, the Tughlaq dynasty came to an end.

The feeble Sayyid dynasty was set aside by Bahlol Lodí, and under his vigorous rule Dehli began to recover some of its old prestige.

The last representative of the Lodis lost his kingdom to the Mughal Bábar on the field of Pánipat in A.D. 1525, but Bábar's son, Humáyún, was defeated and driven out of India by Sher Khán, who succeeded him as Sher Sháh Súrí.

The currency reforms effected by Sher Sháh are mentioned later. This strong and able ruler was succeeded by feeble and unworthy representatives. In the year A.D. 1556 another battle at Pánipat again gave India finally to the Mughals.

In the list of kings are the names of forty Sultáns, whose reigns extend over a period of a little more than three and a half centuries.

Coins of thirty-two of these rulers are contained in the Collection.

THE COINS AND THEIR INSCRIPTIONS.

The Paṭhán Kings or Sultáns of Dehli coined in gold, silver, copper, and a mixture of silver and copper.

The Ghaznvide kings introduced into India the thin gold and silver pieces characteristic of the Muḥammadan issues current in Central Asia, but these were quickly superseded by thicker coins modelled on the native currency. The coins in general use were small, dumpy pieces of mixed metal. Of these Thomas says—'The entire scheme of the sub-divisional currency intervening between the pure silver piece and the copper coin, proceeded upon the plan of mixing silver and copper in the definite proportions required for the several intrinsic values. These alloys were formed into coins identical in weight, shape, and device, so that buyers and sellers had in each case to determine by the eye and the hand the value of the piece tendered in payment. A state of things inconceivable to European ideas, but practically involving but little difficulty among the natives of India even if the ever-ready money-changer were not within call.' (Thomas' 'Chronicles of the Paṭhán Kings of Dehli,' p. 229.)

In very few cases did the coins bear any denomination—for an exception see Coin No. 73—and the possibilities of such a currency must have satisfied the Indian's love of bargaining. A life-long training was necessary to ascertain at a glance the intrinsic value of these pieces, as the only criteria were the feel and colour. Thomas remarks that the one grand merit of a scheme of a mixed metal coinage is that the coins are portable. On the one hand a tangible piece of money is possible for the very minute sub-divisions current in those days, in place of a star or flake of silver, which a breath of wind would blow away; and on the other, the inconvenient weight incident to the lower value of pure copper was avoided. But such a system could only be maintained if the rulers were honest, and the workmen accurate. These qualities were often absent, and interminable abuses resulted. It was left to Sher Sháh Súrí to abolish the use of these indeterminate mixtures of silver and copper, and to adopt the employment of pure metals. The improvement is due to this king, and not to the succeeding Mughal emperors.

Muhammad bin Sám did not force an alien system of coinage on the people of India. He adopted the bull and horseman device, which had first been used by the Brahman kings of Kábul, and many of his coins are bilingual. In addition to an Arabic inscription, they bear his name or title in Nágari characters, which could be read by his new subjects—see Coins Nos. 6 and 7. A series of coins struck in gold at Kanauj has on one side the image of the Indian goddess Lakhshmi, and on the other side the name of Muhammad Sám stamped in Nágari characters after the fashion of the preceding Indian rulers of Kanauj. One bull and horseman coin is known bearing the names of Muhammad bin Sám and Prithví Rája. These were wise concessions on the part of the conqueror. Balban was the last king who employed the device of the horseman on his coins, but the minting of bilingual coins was not discontinued till the time of Muhammad bin Tughlaq. From the beginning of his reign only Arabic and Persian inscriptions were used, till Sher Sháh Súrí amongst other reforms, reintroduced the use of a translation of the monarch's name into the vernacular. See Coin No. 115.

As a general rule the coins exhibit the name of the king, the mint, and the Hijrī date. One of the first acts of a monarch on ascending the throne was to have coins struck in his name. Sikandar, grandson of Fīroz Shāh Tughlaq, only reigned forty-five days, but coins of at least five types in billon have been found. It is said that a bihishti or water-carrier did some great service to Humáyūn, and in return was made king for a day. Although his reign was ephemeral, coins were struck in his name on pieces of a leather water-bag.

Muhammadan history is peculiarly susceptible to illustration and rectification from numismatic sources. I have just said that usually each coin records the name and titles of the ruler, the name of the mint, and the date of issue. The value of the evidence inscribed on these contemporary documents in metal is greatly enhanced by the exaggerated importance attached by the Muhammadans to that department of the conventional regal functions, involved in the right to coin. ‘Among these peoples, the recitation of the public prayer in the name of the aspirant to the throne, associated with the issue of money bearing his superscription, was unhesitatingly received as the overt act of accession. Unquestionably, in the state of civilization here obtaining, the production and facile dispersion of a new royal device was singularly well adapted to make manifest to the comprehension of all classes the immediate change in the supreme ruling power. In places where men did not print, these stamped moneys obtruding into every Bázār constituted the most effective manifestoes and proclamations human ingenuity could have devised: readily multiplied, they were individually the easiest and most naturally transported of all official documents. . . . On the occasion of new conquests, the reigning Sultán’s titles were ostentatiously paraded on the local money, ordinarily in the language and alphabet of the indigenous races, to secure the more effective announcement of the fact that they themselves had passed under the sway of an alien suzerain.’ [The Chronicles of the Pathān Kings of Dehli (Thomas)—pages 1 and 2.]

Dehli is the commonest mint. It is denoted by various honorific titles, as :—

حضرت
دارالملک

Presence. (No. 33.)
The Seat of the Kingdom. (No. 95.)

دار الاسلام
دار الخلافة

The Seat of the faith of Islām. (No. 69.)
The Seat of the Khalifate. (No. 47).

Other mints represented in this Collection are Sultānpūr (No. 57), Pass of Dáhár (No. 70), Ágra (No. 115), Gwáliar (No. 116), Shergarh (No. 118), Alwar (No. 126), Hīṣṣár (No. 132), Kálpí (No. 134), Nárnol (No. 135), Sambhal (No. 138).

Regal titles are :—

امير المومنين	Commander of the Faithful. (No. 34.)
المظفر	Conqueror. (No. 47.)
غازي	Fighter of Infidels. (No. 53.)
خليفة	Khalif. (No. 50.)
خليفة رب العالمين	Khalif of the Lord of the Two Worlds (heaven and earth). (No. 47.)
نائب امير المومنين	Viceroy. (No. 93.)
ولى	Lord. (No. 52.)
سكندر الثاني	Second Alexander. (No. 40.)
يمين الخلافة	Right hand of the Khalifate. (No. 40.)

Shamsu-d-dín Altamsh received a diploma of investiture from the Khalif of Baghdád, which was the official hierarchical recognition of the new Indo-Muḥammadan kingdom. The names of the Abbasid Khalifs Náṣir and Mustansir appear on the silver currency of Altamsh. This practice of recording the name of the reigning Khalif on the Dehli coinage was discontinued by Rukna-d-dín Ibráhím. Meanwhile the office of Khalif had been extinguished in the person of Musta'sim, who was cruelly put to death by Hulákú Khán on the capture and sack of Baghdád in the year A.H. 656. But it was revived in Egypt three years afterwards.

Qutbu-d-dín Mubárák Sháh definitely called himself the most mighty Imám, Khalifa of the Lord of the Two Worlds—see Coin No. 47, and his capital Dár-ul-Khiláfat, ‘seat of the vicegerent of God.’ It was Muḥammad bin Tughlaq who recollected that no king or prince could exercise regal power without confirmation by the Khalifa. ‘Later in his reign (741 A.H.) his religious sentiments asserted themselves more definitively, and scruples having arisen in his mind as to the imperfection of his own title to the sover-eighty—unconfirmed as it was by sacerdotal sanction—he sought to remedy this defect by soliciting the patent of the then representative of the line of the Abassid Khalifs, whose immediate predecessors had so fallen from their ancient high estate as to accept a palace and a pension from the Sultan of Egypt. In anticipation of the receipt of such acknowledgment, Muḥammad bin Tughlaq discontinued the use of his own name on the coinage, and supplanted it by that of Al Mustakfibillah, whose designation appears on the Indian coins minted in 741, 742 and 743 A.H.; while the later periods are marked by that of his son, Al Ḥákim b'amr illah Abúal Abbás Aḥmad." (Chronicles of the Paṭhán Kings of Dehli, pp. 256 and 257.)

Names of Khalifs appearing on coins in the present Collection are:—

ABBASID KHALIFS OF BAGHDAD.

	Date of Accession.	Number of Coin.
Al Musta'sim	.. 640	22, 26, 30, 34.

ABBASID KHALIFS OF EGYPT.

Al Mustakfi I	.. 701	58.
Al Ḥákim II	.. 740	64.
Al Mu'tazid	.. 753	84.
Al Mutawakkil I	.. 763	85, 86, 89, 91, 98.
(Al Mutawakkil 'alí illah abú 'abd allah Muḥammad).

With regard to the dates on the coins I may explain that the Hijri Era commences with the flight of the Prophet Muḥammad from Mecca to Medina, which took place on the 15th July, 622 A.D. In order to convert dates of the Hijri to the Christian Era, from Hijri deduct 3 per cent., and add 622.

The above coin in the joint names of Ghiás-ud-dín, and Mu'izz-ud-dín, bears testimony to the associated regal powers of the two brothers. INTRODUCTION

The coins of the Mughal Emperors were struck in gold, silver, and copper. The introduction of the use of unalloyed metals was due to Sher Sháh Súrî—see the Note on the Coins of the Pathán Kings.

Bábar had been a ruler for many years before he defeated Ibráhím Lodi on the field of Pánípat, and had issued coins in various parts of Túrkestán. These were thin silver pieces which followed the fashion of the coins of the descendants of Taimúr. They are rare. In copper Bábar appears to have struck at only one mint—Ágra.

Humáyún, succeeding his father Bábar, coined after the same style—see coin No. 161.

Akbar appears to have modelled his coinage on that of Sher Sháh, and like that monarch, he issued a great number of large and thick copper coins known as dáms, from many mints—for examples see coins Nos. 203 to 212. For the first thirty years of Akbar's life, his coinage shows but little change. The silver coins exhibit the Kalima, together with the names of the four Imáms, 'Alí, 'Umr, 'Uṣmán, and Abú Bakr, and their titles or qualities. These were the four orthodox Khalifs, and immediate successors of the Prophet. The titles vary slightly but are usually:—

ابوبكر صديق	Abú Bakr, the faithful witness.
عمر فاروق	'Umr, the timid.
عثمان ابو نورين	'Uṣmán, the father of two lights.
على مرتضى	'Alí, the chosen.

See coins Nos. 170 and 226. Akbar continued the use of square rupees and mohurs (Nos. 181 to 190), probably in imitation of the coinage of Málwa. Square coins of the Súrîs in gold and silver are known.

In the thirtieth year of Akbar's reign a change, which had been long foreshadowed, showed itself in Akbar and on his currency. He began to date his coins from the first year of his reign, which he called the Iláhi or Divine year 1. The word is written الهى. The inference was that Akbar's person was also divine, and he invented a new creed which henceforth appeared on his coins. It was a short one الله اكبر جل جلاله (Alláhú Akbar Jal Jalálahú). The translation is 'God is most great, let His brightness shine forth,' but the same words slightly rearranged can mean 'Akbar is God, let His brightness shine forth.' The names of the months and days of the Iláhi Era are the same as the old Persian ones. The era was used by Akbar, Jahángír, and Sháh Jahán, often together with the Hijrí date. See coins Nos. 188, 214, and 236.

Jahángír struck round and square coins in gold and silver. His copper coins are rare. The bázárs were still encumbered with the enormous copper issues of Sher Sháh and Akbar. In fact the copper coins of the Mughal Emperors between Aurangzeb and Sháh 'Álam II are rare, and in some cases are as yet unknown. The chief feature of Jahángír's coinage is the Persian couplet inscriptions they bear. Characteristic examples are extant on coins Nos. 217, 220 and 223. He had the name of Núr Jahán, a favourite and beautiful consort, put on some of his coins—see coin No. 224. The most striking series of the coins of Jahángír are his zodiacal mohurs and rupees. These exhibit a sign of the zodiac on one side, and on the other a Persian inscription. Most of them were struck at Ágra and 'Ahmadábád. Owing to their beauty and scarcity, they are much in demand by collectors, and visitors to India. The demand has been met to a certain extent by forgery, and these coins should only be purchased from trustworthy sources, and with sufficient precaution. Intending buyers should especially beware of complete sets, and half rupees.

Dáwar Bakhsh was a stop gap who only ruled for three months.

The main interest of Sháh Jahán's coins arises from the names of the mints they bear.

Aurangzeb, the son of Sháh Jahán, was a bigoted Muḥammadan, and forbade the use of the Kalima on his coins, saying that so holy a thing should not be bandied about in the hands of the infidel. The Kalima is the Muḥammadan profession of faith:—

لا اله الا الله محمد رسول الله

There is no god but God ;

Muḥammad is the Prophet of God.

He invented a couplet of his own—see coin No. 256—, and adhered to it all through his long reign. At the same time he adopted a formula for the reverse side of the coin, which was almost invariably used by all his successors. This was:—

سنه جلوس هيمنت مانوس

‘ In the year of his reign associated with prosperity.’

The coins of Aurangzeb's revolted brothers Sháh Shujá', and Murád Bakhsh, and sons A'zam Sháh, and Kám Bakhsh, are all rare.

The reign of Aurangzeb marks the commencement of a steady decadence in the Mughal Empire, which is reflected in the currency of the succeeding Emperors.

Sháh 'Alam Bahádur Sháh I reigned only five years, Jahándár Sháh part of one, Farrukh Siyar less than eight. In the same year that Farrukh Siyar died, three kings ascended the throne, Rafi 'ud Daraját, Rafi 'ud Daula and Muḥammad Sháh. The reigns of the first two cover only a few months. About the same time Muḥammad Nekosiyar, and Muḥammad Ibráhím raised rebellions, but their revolts were quickly ended. The coins of Muḥammad Ibráhím are rare. It is not certain whether Muḥammad Nekosiyar coined in his own name, or not.

It was in the time of Muḥammad Sháh that Nádir Sháh, the Persian, invaded India, and sacked Dehli. See Coin No. 371.

Aḥmad Shah, called Bahádur on his coins, and his successor 'Álamgír II, each reigned for about six years. At this period the country was overrun by Aḥmad Sháh Durrání, the successor of Nádir. For coins of this invader struck at Dehli, see Nos. 381—2.

On the death of 'Álamgír II followed the usual disputed succession, and the ephemeral reign of one of the disputants Shah Jahán III. His coins are necessarily rare. Sháh 'Álam reigned in Dehli nearly 49 years, but his power was very limited. The East India Company struck millions of rupees in his name.

Bedár Bakht was the figurehead of a conspiracy in A.H. 1202-03.

Akbar II had for his empire the Fort of Dehli, nevertheless he issued coins, and many coins were struck in his name by the rulers of Native States.

The last of the house of Bábar who sat on the throne of Dehli was Bahádur Shah II. He coined a few rupees in Dehli Fort, and these coins are very rare.

Of the seventeen regular rulers known as the Mughal Emperors, the issues of fifteen are represented in this Collection.

The Coins and their Inscriptions.

The nişár was made for the purpose of distribution on the occasions of great festivals. It is usually somewhat thinner than the coins of currency, and is marked with the word نیشار. Examples are coins Nos. 252 to 254, and 296.

It was the rule for each succeeding Mughal Emperor to adopt his own Persian couplet for inscription on the currency. The Catalogue shows this sufficiently.

A Mughal coin exhibits the name of the king, the mint, and the year, both Hijri and regnal. In cases where the Iláhi Era is used, the name of the month is generally given.

The name of the capital is the mint which most commonly recurs. It is known as Dehli till the time of Sháh Jahán, who was the founder of the modern city. He renamed it Sháhjahánábád, and the title Dár ul Khiláfat or Seat of the Khalifate is prefixed to the name. Other mints represented in this Collection were also given titles.

These were :—

Dár uz Zafr (Bijápur). Seat of Victory. (No. 277).

Dár ul Amán (Agra). Gate of Safety. (No. 162.)

Dár uz Zarb Mutabarrak Khittá (Jaunpúr). Mint of the blessed District. (No. 165.)

Dár us Saltanat (Láhor). Seat of the Sultanate. (No. 286.)

Mustaqir ul Khiláfat (Akbarábád). Resting place of the Head of the Religion. (No. 285.)

Mustaqir ul Mulk (Akbarábád). Resting-place of the Kingdom. (No. 315.)

Dar us Sarúr (Burhánpúr). Seat of Pleasure. (No. 325.)

Before its name was changed to Sháhjahánábád, the capital was sometimes, as in pre-Mughal days, known as Hazrat (Presence) and Dár ul Mulk (Capital)—see coin No. 164. From the reign of Sháh Jahán onwards, Ágra is invariably denoted on the coins as Akbarábád, that is, the city founded by Akbar.

The Collection contains coins issued from forty-nine different mints.
